

The Friends of the Tasmanian Museum & Art Gallery

invite you to visit the

Wicking Dementia Research & Education Centre

This unusual event is at the new UTAS Medical Sciences Building at 17 Liverpool Street — which may be controversial on the outside, but there is no argument about the value of what goes on inside.

This important national centre for medical research houses the Wicking Centre, named for its benefactors, the family behind the Kiwi shoe-polish empire.

As part of its research into the causes and possible treatments of different forms of dementia, the Centre teamed up with the TMAG to develop a 'Memory Case' to research the use of reminiscence therapy for people with dementia.

Come and hear Professor James Vickers talking about the Centre's projects. Take a tour of the building, including the research laboratories. Dr Carolyn King and TMAG's Andy Baird will tell you more about the iRemember Memory Cases, and you can take a trip down memory lane yourself delving in to 'In the Kitchen' Case.
