

TMAG Children's Reference Panel Information Sheet

What is the TMAG Children's Reference Panel?

The Tasmanian Museum and Art Gallery (TMAG) Children's Reference Panel is a select group of children and youth who are interested in contributing to the work of the Tasmanian Museum and Art Gallery through providing advice, feedback and recommendations. The purpose of the panel is for TMAG to hear, engage and empower young voices, enabling this important audience group to influence the planning and development stages of exhibitions, programs and resources. Children and young people will share their experiences and ideas, talk about what matters to them, what they want for themselves and others their age and what they hope for in the future in relation to museums and art galleries. Their contribution will make a difference in how TMAG operates and what it offers.

The panel is made up of approximately 20 members between the age of 7 and 17, each appointed by TMAG following a formal application process, and 2 TMAG representatives. Sub-groups may be convened from the panel members as necessary, according to age and issues to be discussed.

Who is eligible to apply for the TMAG Children's Reference Panel?

- Children and young people who are passionate about issues relevant to their age group, interested in museums and art galleries, and willing to share their views. TMAG are looking for people from different backgrounds, suburbs, and schools.
